

Pass The M.I.C. "Last Day of 12 Days of Recess"

Good Morning!! On Day 5 of "12 Days of Recess", I discovered something about myself. I am NOT a puzzle person! It was late at night and I still needed to do something for recess. I decided to drop a 300-piece puzzle on the table and told my family that we were going to work on it for 10 minutes and continue it the next day. Timer set! Go! My plan? Grab all the border pieces. 4 minutes passed and I had approximately 7 sets of 2 puzzle pieces. All of a sudden, I heard, "Oh great. I need that piece." and a hand ventured in from the left, trying to retrieve one of my pieces. "What?!?! Don't even think about it!!!" Wait, where did that come from? Why did I react like that? Was it the timer's fault? Absolutely! Later, I heard "I still need more blue pieces.". I said, "Shut up, hurry, we have 2 minutes left!" What in the world? That timer was making me crazy! Or was it the fact that we should not have started this at 9pm? Both!

Day 8 and I've learned how to share. We continued to work on the puzzle for 10 minutes every day and now it has become a nighttime ritual. Prayers and then a mad dash to the puzzle. Timer set! Go!

Note: Disregard what I said earlier. I AM A PUZZLE PERSON!!

Years ago, I fell in love with the fitness program, "Masala Bhangra".

I think the first time I saw it was on FitTV which unfortunately is no longer on the air. Later, my sister and I had the pleasure of taking the class at Ailey Extension. Then, it happened... My friends and I were attending the annual Self Workout In The Park (Central Park) and I decided to take a moment and check things out by myself. There she was, the beautiful Sarina Jain. I got a chance to speak to her and of course she thought I was amazing too. She didn't actually say it but I know she was thinking it. LOL

Anyway, I highly recommend the class and included the link below.
